Architecture has become a tool of speculation...
...adding to the pressure on real estate markets...
...and endangering vulnerable communities.
Architects have been complicit in all this. What could they do differently?
Create access to existing space
Mobilise existing knowledge and resources
Develop strategies to save community spaces
Build connections
Move properties out of speculation
Design new models of ownership
Design new models of governance
Put buildings in the centre of local economic circuits
...or at least understand and support these processes.
